Music and Art School Expands to Serve Community Better

Yuliyard Aesthetic Center is gearing up to provide another year of excellence in music instruction. Since opening its Pacific Palisades location in 1996 the goal of the school has been to offer a quality education by adding new programs and improving existing ones. The Center's teachers started their education at a very early age in various parts of the former Soviet Union, obtained their graduate degrees throughout Europe and then acquired post graduate degrees in the States. These are unique professionals, who are not only active performers in their fields – would it be solo or chamber recitals, recording their own CDs or presenting exhibition to the public - but who are also dedicated teachers, eager to share and guide students on a wonderful journey through music and art.

All lessons are taught in the traditional style of the Old Russian classical school. Students 6 years of age and older will develop musicianship skills and ear-training, learn to read music and perform memorized repertoire in a formal setting. Each student's repertoire is chosen according to his or her individual ability and interest; budding musicians are introduced to expressive "real" music the very beginning. YAC's teachers expose their students to carefully chosen pieces from the Baroque, Classical, Romantic, Impressionist and contemporary periods. The development of memory and creativity, imagination and coordination, the ability to study, concentrate and listen (and understand what's heard), make decisions and manage one's time and learning how to finish a task and how to be in control of the situation – are the bonus effects of this school. YAC has a strong emphasis on ensemble playing – pianists practice duets as well as learn how to accompany. The students of various instruments can play together, forming interesting teams for their performances.

Center's students receive a thorough instruction in classical music which is both recreational and academic, appropriate for all ages and levels. Classes available this fall include classical cello, violin, chamber ensembles, theory, solfege, music appreciation, harmony.. YAC's computer lab allows students to polish up their theory through multiple software programs.

Yuliyard's students participate in a variety of recitals and competitions, festivals and concerts in the studio as well as the ones organized by Music Teachers Association of California. Over the years they've become a community, growing together academically and creatively. Hearing each other as well as their teachers play on a quarterly basis helps them make steady progress. Studio performances have taken place in various private homes in the Pacific Palisades, at Theatre Palisades and at the Women's Club of Pacific Palisades. YAC's students have shared their gift with others - students have performed in retirement homes of Southern California :in Santa Monica, San-Fernando Valley, San Diego and at the Palisades' very own Sunrise Assisted Living community.

Young musicians are guided through at times rigorous process with careful attention – families are advised to work with their children at home to improve quality. A long term commitment to learning the craft is essential - the whole family's collaboration with a teacher brings fruitful results. Parents are offered private classes and consultations to support their child(ren)'s development. In-depth quality is also encouraged by projects such as CD recording and performing with professional musicians.

Yuliyard Aesthetic Center encourages its students to study broad aspects of music and art, if not to become professional musicians and artists themselves, then to become well-educated and informed and to be able to grasp a wider range of cultural heritage than what is presented in the mass media. The Center educates students as young as four with its pre-music courses. It also produces a series of lectures on integrated art and music subjects for adults, such as contemporary repertoire and the parallel between music and art through the ages. Classes for these two groups are offered earlier in the day, while school age students are in school.

The overall mission of the Center is to provide students of all ages with the skills they need to enjoy music for their lifetime. Please call (310) 454-9697 for more information about the Center and its activities.
